

THE LOTTERY

1. Did you like the story? Why? Why not?

Yes, I liked the story because it was very shocking and unexpected. It makes readers think about how dangerous blind obedience to tradition can be. Even though the ending is disturbing, it's a powerful message about human nature and society.

2. Did you suspect what was going to happen?

No, I didn't suspect it at first. The story starts very normally, with people gathering for what seems like a happy event. Only near the end did I start to feel that something was wrong, when people became nervous and quiet.

3. In your opinion, how would this lottery affect the relationships within families and the community?

The lottery would create fear and distrust among people. Families might secretly hope that other families are chosen instead of theirs. It would also destroy the sense of unity in the community, because everyone knows that one of them will be killed every year.

4. The lottery seems to be optional, since some towns have stopped doing it.

Why would people in this town want to keep doing it?

People in this town keep doing it because they are afraid of change. They believe that stopping the lottery would bring bad luck, and they have been taught to follow tradition without questioning it. It's also easier for them to continue the ritual than to challenge what everyone else believes.

5. Can you think of a real-life example of something bad that people still do because of tradition?

One real-life example is bullfighting in some countries. Many people continue this tradition even though it causes suffering to animals. They defend it as part of their culture, even when others see it as cruel and unnecessary.
